MC'S MOST WANTED

Resurrection often fails (see Pet Sematary and Frankenstein's monster), even when it comes to mascara. If you want to revive sagging or flaking lashes, you have to remove your makeup and start anew or risk a clumpy, black mascara apocalypse. Until now. Urban Decay's transparent lash serum softens whatever's already on lashes and makes them newly pliable so you can load on more of your favorite mascara. (Insert "It's alive!" lash joke here.)

Urban Decay Mascara Resurrection, $16.

WHO:

Makeup artist and cofounder of Stowaway Cosmetics, a new line of mini, travel-friendly products, like a lipstick the size of a triple-A battery.

TRAVEL TIP:

"The women I know who fly a lot—myself included—always pack multipurpose products, like our Lip & Cheek Rouge Pot [$15], to lighten their load."

DISCOVERED ABROAD:

"I loved using Blue Lagoon Rich Nourishing Cream [$119] while I was in Iceland. It contains skin-repairing algae indigenous to a geothermal lake outside Reykjavik."

ON-THE-GO LOOK:

"A girlfriend of mine calls my makeup look 'aggressively natural.' I can get away with just Smith's Rosebud Salve [$6] and concealer if necessary."

VOYAGE ESSENTIAL:

"My plane must-have is Clinique Moisture Surge Face Spray [$22]. I've tried so many different hydrating mists, but this is my tried-and-true favorite—it's super-soothing and moisturizing."

HAVING A MOMENT "TERROIR" MASKS

New face treatments are using muds and clays from different locations (with geologically unique characteristics) to improve skin. Caudalie's Instant Detox Mask features a mix of red and white French clays that declog pores, while the namesake ingredient in Peter Thomas Roth's Irish Moor Mud has amino and fatty acids that nourish skin. And Charlotte Tilbury's Goddess Skin Clay Mask is formulated with the same oil-absorbing Spanish clay that the famous makeup artist used on her face while growing up in Ibiza.
